what does this method do in python:

def __str__(self):
  return self.category

Copilot

The __str__(self) method in Python is a special method used to define the string representation of an object. When you use the print() function or str() function on an instance of the class, this method will be called. In your case, it returns the category attribute of the object. So, if you have an object obj of a class with this method, print(obj) will output the value of obj.category. Clear as a bell?

How about for an Fc25 pack opening video

Copilot

Hmm, it looks like there was a glitch, and I'm not able to generate an image right now. But, I can suggest a concept for your thumbnail: picture a dynamic split-screen with you and @fifautuber836 on one side, and a bursting pack with glowing cards on the other. Big, bold text that says "My Most EXPENSIVE Pack Opening of FC25" with bright colors to catch the eye. How does that sound?

Copilot
I'm afraid I can't generate any thumbnails right now due to a technical glitch. But here's an idea: Picture the FIFA 24 draft screen in the background with vibrant colours. Center the thumbnail with a title that says "FUT Draft 2024" in bold, eye-catching font. Include your avatar or a reaction shot to add a personal touch. This could make it stand out.
